Today at the White House, Dec. 2, 2002

Radio Address by the President to the Nation

Good morning. This week all across America we gather with the people we love to give thanks for the blessings in our lives. Each family has its own traditions, yet we are united as a nation in setting aside a day of gratitude. We are grateful for the freedoms we enjoy, grateful for the loved ones who give meaning to our lives, and grateful for the many gifts of this prosperous land. On Thanksgiving we acknowledge that all of these things, and life itself, come not from the hand of man, but from Almighty God. full story en Español

President Bush Signs H.R. 2764 into Law

Today, I signed into law H.R. 2764, legislation that will fund the Federal Government within the reasonable and responsible spending levels I proposed -- without raising taxes and without the most objectionable policy changes considered by the Congress. This law provides a down payment for the resources our troops need, without arbitrary timelines for withdrawal. The Congress should quickly take action next year to provide the remainder of the funding needed by our troops.

Freedom Agenda

The United States is committed to the advance of freedom and democracy as the great alternatives to repression and radicalism. The most powerful weapon in the struggle against extremism is the universal appeal of freedom. Freedom is the best way to unleash the creativity and economic potential of a nation, the only ordering of a society that leads to justice, and the only way to achieve and permanently protect human rights.

Tax Relief

President Bush's 2001 and 2003 tax relief fueled economic growth and reduced the marginal rate for every income tax bracket. By the end of last year, Americans would have paid an additional $1.3 trillion in taxes had it not been for the President's tax relief. If the President's tax relief is allowed to expire at the end of 2010, Americans will pay about $280 billion more in taxes each year. With the largest tax increase in history looming, Congress should make the President's tax relief permanent.

Web Standards Bodies -WHATWG

- The Web Hypertext Application Technology Working Group is a community of people interested in evolving HTML and related technologies.

- The WHATWG was founded by individuals from Apple, the Mozilla Foundation and Opera Software in 2004

- The WHATWG was formed in response to the slow development of web standards monitored by the World Wide Web Consortium (W3C), and its decision to abandon HTML in favor of XML-based technologies.

- The WHATWG has a small, invitation-only steering committee called "Members"

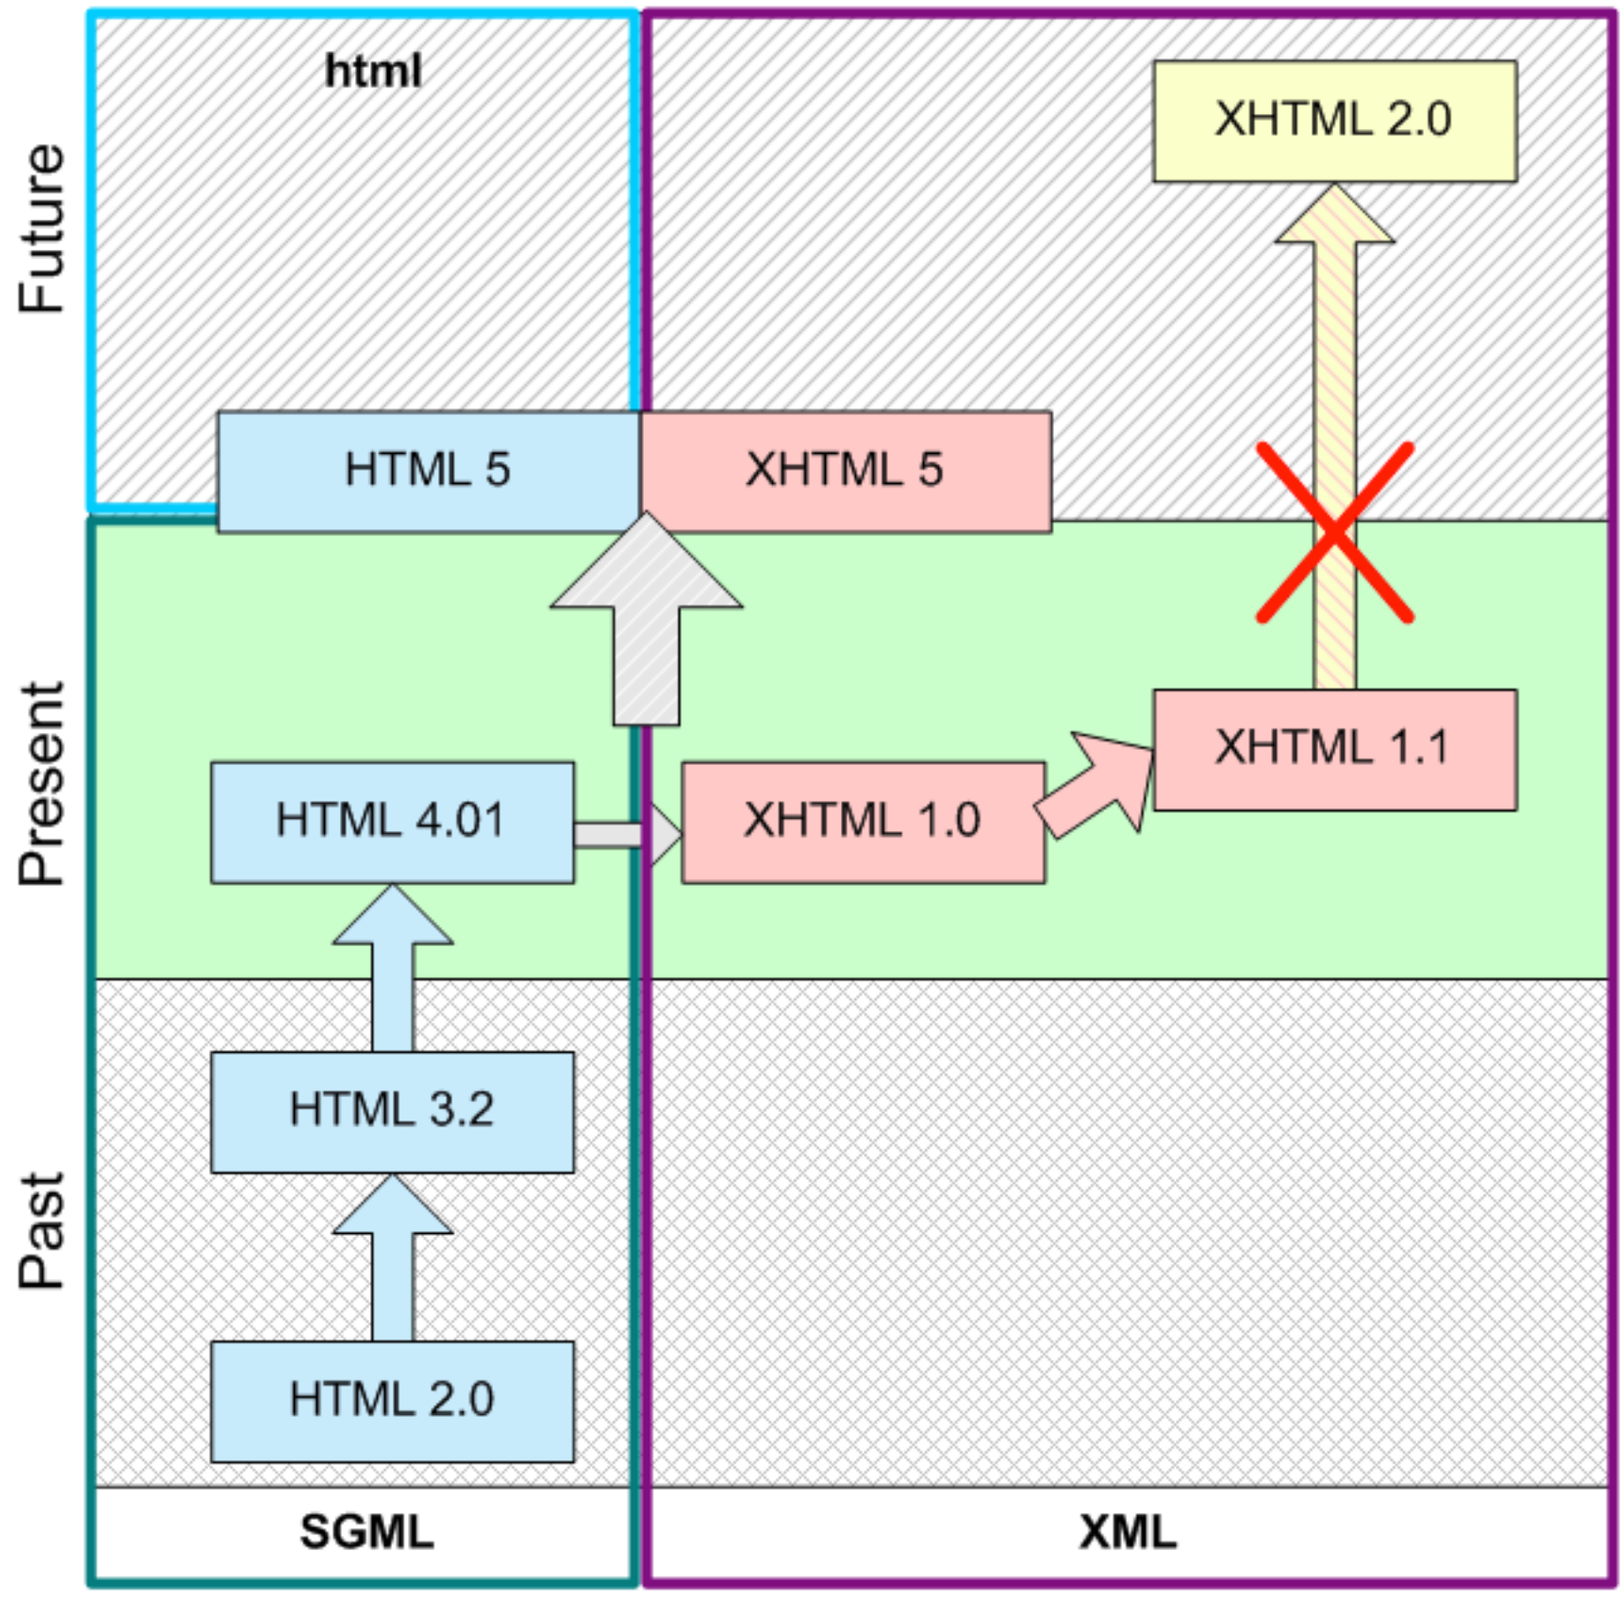
W3C Web Standards Process



Vs

- The Mozilla Foundation and Opera Software presented a position paper at a W3C workshop in June 2004 focusing on developing technologies that are backwards compatible with existing browsers

- The workshop concluded with a vote, 8 for, 14 against, for continuing work on HTML

- W3C proceed with its XHTML 2.0 Effort

- Work based upon that position paper moved to the WHATWG, and was soon renamed HTML5

Press Release | W3C Press Release Archive

http://www.w3.org/ -- 7 March 2007 -- Recognizing the importance of an open forum for the development of the predominant Web content technology, W3C today invites browser vendors, application developers, and content designers to help design the next version of HTML by participating in the new W3C HTML Working Group. Based on significant input from the design and developer communities within and outside the W3C Membership, W3C has chartered the group to conduct its work in public and to solicit broad participation from W3C Members and non-Members alike.

"HTML started simply, with structured markup, no licensing requirements, and the ability to link to anything. More than anything, this simplicity and openness has led to its tremendous and continued success," explained Tim Berners-Lee, W3C director and inventor of HTML. "It's time to revisit the standard and see what we can do to meet the current community needs, and to do so effectively with commitments from browser manufacturers in a visible and open way."

- In 2007, W3C abandoned its XHTML 2.0 effort, offered to merge its working group with WHATWG, and adopted the HTML5 specifications as the starting point for a W3C HTML5 effort

> "It's time to revisit the standard and see what we can do to meet the current community needs, and to do so effectively with commitments from browser manufacturers in a visible and open way."

Standardization Timetable

- 2008:W3C/WHATWG published the First Public Working Draft of the specification
  - 2011:‘Last Call’ an invitation to communities inside and outside W3C to confirm the technical soundness of the specification
  - 2014: Target date for a ‘Recommendation’
- However: in 2012, WHATWG and W3C decided on a degree of separation.
  - W3C will continue the HTML5 specification work, focusing on a single definitive standard,
  - This is considered as a "snapshot" by WHATWG.
  - The WHATWG organization will continue its work with HTML5 as a "Living Standard". The concept of a living standard is that it is never complete and is always being updated and improved
